SCHEDULE 2

Closure Plan

Sierramin Bauxite Project (the "Project")

Environmental

The Mining Area for the Project consists mainly of low value undeveloped land currently vegetated with scrub. There are very few mature trees, agricultural areas or community developments. The Project has an initial life of 17 years however there is significant evidence of substantial resources of bauxite which could support mining for 2 to 3 times the initial mining period.

The bauxite deposits are poddy in nature and generally occur on topographic highs. Mining is planned to remove and store topsoil close by, a relatively small amount of overburden will be mined which will be stored close by the mining face initially. Once the mining operations are in steady state it is planned to back-fill selected excavations with overburden on an on-going basis. Topsoil will be redistributed over the filled excavations and planting undertaken following consultation with the local communities and other interested stakeholders. Planting priorities will be driven by the requirements of the local communities and will include food crops, timber and indigenous plants. Annual budget is US$0.2 per tonne ore mined and is currently included in annual mining costs.

Run of mine ore will be trucked to a central plant facility where the ore will be beneficiated to export quality. Dry waste will be produced during the first two years after which a wet tailing will be produced. There is no potential for acid rock mine drainage given the nature of the material being mined or the host rock. Both dry and wet waste is relatively inert and thus post-closure activities will focus on controlling solids in water run-off and ensuring the wet tailings impoundment dam wall is properly maintained.

The plant site occupies approximately 1km². At the conclusion of operations it is planned that all equipment and buildings will be removed from site and the area allowed to re-vegetate. Cost of removal of plant is assumed to be covered by the salvage cost.

Socio-economic

The Project will employ approximately 300 people directly with another 300-400 employed by contractors and suppliers. Employees will be taught a wide variety of skills which will significantly up-skill from the current level. This will undoubtedly encourage employee mobility as they become attractive employees on a national and international stage. It is planned to optimise long term sustainability.
